Alexandra/Township Dark City (Book One 1)

Synopsis

Alexandra was persistently condemned by apartheid, relentlessly protected from the unjust in a futile engagement to prevent her from being caught in the clutches of the oppressor by her owners as part of the historic struggle. Ironically, their children remain in a "tug of war" with present day government structures and invaders for the liberation of Alex. Under siege by a new scourge of illegal inference against Alexandra's rightful owners, signaling disruption in its path - Alexandra begs for peace in her hundredth year and beyond. While supported by power hungry politicians who brought them here in the first place to vote them into power, these are here living in overcrowded squalor after being abandoned by the perpetrators of this ploy to mislead and to disrupt the wellbeing of their own as if the owners of Alex had no part or experience in the suffering and hardships of apartheid. They are being treated like the enemy and as an accomplice of apartheid by the means of political lies as the power hungry monger for position. This is a perspective of this legendary Black Township that has never been told.
