An essential read for all metalheads, from the same folks that brought you "Choosing Death", an indespensible history of death metal and grindcore. If you're a music junkie, you'll read every chapter, even if you don't know about or like the album being discussed. The albums selected are all worthy of the lengthy treatment they're given. Imagine condensing the "33 1/3" series into pocket-size essays on 25 albums, and you've got the idea. The problem is, they only write these reviews (in the book, expanded versions of articles from "Decibel" magazine) when they can track down and interview everyone associated with the album in question. The intro explains why several albums can't and won't be part of the ongoing magazine series. Also, if a band member is deceased, they won't choose that album (being as how they can't get a fresh "looking back" opinion from that member/members), so that explains why such artists as Metallica, Pantera, and Death are not included in their selections. Still, there's lots of info here, sure to please just about anyone who has listened to metal from 1980-on. Can't wait for a sequel.

Arrived in great condition

I found this book fascinating cover to cover. Being able to kind of see behind-the-scenes of the making of many classic metal albums has really made me enjoy them even more. There's not much technical audio engineering/production info, but more of the vibe of the recording sessions and how the songs were written and pieced together. Also, reading about bands and albums I had never heard before definitely made me go check them out and add them to my collection. Overall, an excellent reference book for any metal fan's library! Would love to see a Vol. 2 someday!

good stuff in here man

bought as present for son. he loves the book.

Very interesting, endlessly entertaining, often inspiring. Personal favorites going in were Kyuss, Sleep, and Opeth. Learning about other amazing albums that I hadn't yet checked out has been a goddamn treat.

omg!!! wow!!! this has got to be one of the greatest purchases of my life! if you love metal (like the entire world should ;p) you will not be disappointed! xo to the beautiful demented soul who put this together!!! ;p

Very analized and a great effort
