Customer Reviews

You've all heard of the budding young track star who is spectacular in one sport, but whose grades in P.E. class always seem to be low. The main reason is that health depends on all-round physical development, and proficiency in one sport only can be detrimental to the development of good general health and physical well-being. The student who shows ability in a wide range of activities brings home the best P.E. grades. All-round training is also the most reliable foundation for achieving a high level of performance in a specialized field, e.g., track and field, tennis, basketball, soccer, etc. This foundation is acquired most quickly and effectively in childhood and adolescence.

It pays to begin with a varied training program even if your ultimate goal is to specialize in one particular event. Such a program might include activities as diverse as gymnastics, swimming, hardball, soccer, and basketball. Similarly, even if you have decided to specialize in a specific track event, such as high jumping or discus throwing, your training program should embrace a wide variety of other track and field activities as well. This book contains a wide variety of exercises for the track and field athlete that can be done individually, in small groups, and with or without the assistance of your coach or P.E. teacher. Of course, you are encouraged to ask for advice from others--your P.E. teacher, your coach, and even your parents. Whatever approach you feel comfortable with, if you combine the independent practice exercises contained in this book with formal training in track and field, we are confident you will find the book extremely beneficial.
