

The book was found

Real Presences

Synopsis

Can there be major dimensions of a poem, a painting, a musical composition created in the absence of God? Or, is God always a real presence in the arts? Steiner passionately argues that a transcendent reality grounds all genuine art and human communication. "A real tour de force. . . . All the virtues of the author's astounding intelligence and compelling rhetoric are evident from the first sentence onward." —Anthony C. Yu, Journal of Religion

Book Information

Paperback: 236 pages

Publisher: University Of Chicago Press; 1 edition (April 23, 1991)

Language: English

ISBN-10: 0226772349

ISBN-13: 978-0226772349

Product Dimensions: 5.5 x 0.7 x 8.5 inches

Shipping Weight: 9.6 ounces (View shipping rates and policies)

Average Customer Review: 3.6 out of 5 stars 9 customer reviews

Best Sellers Rank: #195,598 in Books (See Top 100 in Books) #115 in Books > Textbooks > Humanities > Literature > Literary Theory #126 in Books > Politics & Social Sciences > Philosophy > Criticism #1597 in Books > Literature & Fiction > History & Criticism > Criticism & Theory

Customer Reviews

Steiner asserts moral and metaphysical issues are the basis of all art and that our experience of meaning in music, painting and literature presupposes the existence of God as a "necessary possibility." "Dense, difficult, rewarding, this passionately argued essay ranges fluently over aesthetics, linguistics, philosophy, post-structuralism, the range of Western culture," said PW. Copyright 1991 Reed Business Information, Inc.

In this dense, prolix book, critic, linguist, novelist, polymath Steiner holds that in the creation of art (especially music), and in its experiencing, there is a fundamental encounter with a "real presence" and that, in fact, it is this transcendent reality that grounds all genuine art and human communication. He does not so much argue this in the traditional manner as give a "transcendental argument" à la Kant: since so much literature and so many literary figures attest to the thesis, it must be true. Because of its lack of discursive argument, this difficult book will be dissatisfying to philosophers and largely impenetrable to the general reader. But sophisticated readers looking for highly learned literary criticism will find much here to ponder.- Leon H. Brody, U.S. Office of Personnel Management Lib., Washington, D.C. Copyright 1989 Reed Business Information, Inc.

--This text refers to an out of print or unavailable edition of this title.

If you love language, you will love this book. It will open so many more authors and ideas to you that you will give up reading fluff and inelegant "stuff," just not enough time for the good stuff. Please read the book through without so much stopping to analyze each word. Get the gist the first time through or the first and second times, and then go through word for word. You need to get the overall picture, concept, "vibe," and then you can drill deep. It isn't as daunting as you fear. Read, read, read, and then you will find you do get the idea, you get it. If you go word by word FIRST, you will stop short of the end.

This small but complicated book is an effort to explore the deepest questions confronting human creativity. Steiner begins by seeking to remove artistic expression from the domain of science and scientific impulses that are so evident in post-modern criticism. He concedes that language is under attack -- and from many different directions. The 20th century brought us many intellectual movements that sought to divorce us from the word -- psychology, which sought truth in dreams and fantasies; linguistic theory that sought to isolate signs from meaning; deconstructionism, which suggests that language, being so imprecise a tool of communication, is therefore not useful in an exploration for truth. Authors themselves, so this argument goes, cease to matter. Then there is the deterioration of language, so stock with cliches and predictable usage that rob it of its power and vitality. Of course, all of these claims are interesting, some even contain some truth, but Steiner contends that somewhere between nihilism and the dogmatic notion that texts are sacred and final (not open to disagreement and discussion), there is a common sense middle ground. Human experience is complex and it can unfold in many ways, at different levels. Music is a common thread in human emotional life -- it is part of artistic expression. Words, while not always well used, still have the power to move us -- enabling us to give directions, buy groceries, build bridges or express feelings of deep love or loss. The masters of language and art shake us at our core, force us to examine more deeply our humanity, and reshape our reality even as we are unaware of their formative power. Steiner then argues that it is the need to find meaning in existence, to explore the borderland between life and death, that literature and artistic expression are rooted in the transcendent. He is not so much saying that God infuses all art, but rather that the search for God and the need to create as God creates is the powerful moving force in human creation. (It is here that he makes the controversial claim that women, because they bring life into the world, are not as driven as men to express themselves creatively....) This is not an easy read. Some sections had to be read several times. In this case, I would agree with Steiner that my reading is at best an educated glimpse at his argument. Steiner writes beautifully in places, but his style is thick with nuance and references that are often hard to follow. However, those interested in resisting post-modern forces that threaten to fragment the human could not ask for a more impressive thinker to guide them through the murky lower regions that make up the hell of modern criticism. He will then lead you, if not to the paradiso, at least to a place where art, literature and poetry still move the human heart.

When a violinist complained that a passage taxed his skill, Beethoven roared back: "do you think I am worried about a lousy fiddle when the Spirit is speaking to me?" Be it doctrinaire or otherwise, it is startling how many of the great composers - those "sages standing in God's holy fire", ascribed to some sort of belief in the Almighty: Mozart, Bruckner, Beethoven, Haydn, Schumann, Wagner (yes), Bax, Liszt, Tchaikovsky and a certain gentleman called Johann Sebastian Bach. Ambiguity is to be found in the likes of Schubert, Vaughan Williams, Mahler and Brahms. The only composer who was staunchly an atheist belongs to the lower ranks: Delius. Many such composers were conscious of their vocation (what a word to use in this context): Leopold Mozart described his son as the "miracle that God had allowed to be born in Salzburg" and his words were later re-echoed by the progeny; when accosted by his legion of critics, Bruckner retorted: "They want me to write differently. Certainly I could but I must not. God has chosen me from thousands and given me, of all people, this talent. It is to Him that I must give account. How then would I stand there before Almighty God if I followed the others and not Him?" I am always surprised that in discussions as to God's existence, their testimony is not drawn upon more often - not so much for what they might say (which would be incoherent in certain instances) but for their output. What does the Bruckner Eighth say about the cosmos and our place therein? Surely the beginning of the Beethoven Ninth is more insightful on the events that occurred some 14.3 billion years ago than any theory by a propeller head? What truth is evident in the last movement of the Waldstein or its counterpart in Opus 101? And what of the darkness? Surely Sibelius & Brahms in their Fourth Symphonies are authoritative? Can the horror of Auschwitz be encompassed by the Bruckner Ninth? And what deeper reality is evoked - not depicted - by Victoria in the Agnus Dei of his Ave Maris Stella mass? To paraphrase Dostoevsky: God sets us nothing but riddles - and symphonies. Indeed, at its most profound, musicology looks dangerously like theology. Which brings us to the thesis of this book: be it music, painting, poetry, sculpture and writing - why do we have an experience of the transcendental in our encounters with great art? Moreover, what underwrites the experience? If, as Pythagoras postulated, there is an underlying rationality to the universe - best expressed in the Disocuri of Music and Mathematics - why are we attuned to it and to what end? This is an intellectual tour de force. Steiner will make you sweat. Keeping apace with the author is equivalent to running a marathon. Quite rightly he allocates much space to the testimony of music, approached allegorically, in addition to the other arts. He cannot avoid using the word 'Real Presence' to encompass the resultant experience. The metaphor of the Burning Bush is also deployed: to be set alight but not consumed. Therein lies the real game. Richard Dawkins, if you are reading this review (hah!), the likes of Steiner are your real adversaries - not some yokel from the Deep South who believes in Adam & Eve. Stephen Hawkins is more acute: he is deeply suspicious of 'woolly mysticism' and rightly so. Caravaggio's 'Conversion on the Way to Damascus' in the Santa Maria del Popolo is not easily refuted as an experience. Both gentlemen should avoid Parsifal. In short, this is a magisterial study by one of the thinkers of our time. It is not an easy read and nor should it be. In many instances, George 'kicks sand in one's face' with his multi-layered references but this is not done gratuitously: with time running out, one has to delve wider & deeper. PS - Steiner is not a Catholic, however much 'transubstantiation' might appeal to him aesthetically. He belongs broadly to the faith of his forefathers. It says something about the depth of his syncretism that readers could make this assumption.

Download to continue reading...

Real Presences The Real Book of Real Estate: Real Experts. Real Stories. Real Life. Hawaii Real Estate Wholesaling Residential Real Estate Investor & Commercial Real Estate Investing: Learn to Buy Real Estate Finance Hawaii Homes & Find Wholesale Real Estate Houses in Hawaii The Smart Real Estate Investor: Real Estate Book Bundle 2 Manuscripts Expert Strategies on Real Estate Investing, Starting with Little or No Money, Proven Methods for Investing in Real Estate The Smart Real Estate Investor: Real Estate Book Bundle 3 Manuscripts Expert Strategies on Real Estate Investing, Finding and Generating Leads, Funding, Proven Methods for Investing in Real Estate Real Estate: 25 Best Strategies for Real Estate Investing, Home Buying and Flipping Houses (Real Estate, Real Estate Investing, home buying, flipping houses, ... income, investing, entrepreneurship) Real Estate: 30 Best Strategies to Prosper in Real Estate - Real Estate Investing, Financing & Cash Flow (Real Estate Investing, Flipping Houses, Brokers, Foreclosure) The Infertility Journey: Real voices. Real issues. Real insights. Lupus: Real Life, Real Patients, Real Talk How to Start Your Own Real Estate Photography Business!: A Step-by-Step Guide to Show You How to Begin Your Own Real Estate Photography Business in 14 ... for real estate, photographing houses) Real Kids, Real Stories, Real Change: Courageous Actions Around the World Love What Matters: Real People. Real Stories. Real Heart. The Book on Investing In Real Estate with No (and Low) Money Down: Real Life Strategies for Investing in Real Estate Using Other People's Money A Guide to MAKING IT in Real Estate: A SUCCESS GUIDE for real estate lenders, real estate agents and those who would like to learn about the professions. Real Estate: Passive Income: Real Estate Investing, Property Development, Flipping Houses (Commercial Real Estate, Property Management, Property Investment, ... Rental Property, How To Flip A House) Infinite Real Estate ROI: The "Silver Bullet" Method of Real Estate Investing to Control Over $10 Million Worth of Real Estate With No Ca$h, No Credit and No Partners Confessions of a Real Estate Entrepreneur: What It Takes to Win in High-Stakes Commercial Real Estate: What it Takes to Win in High-Stakes Commercial Real Estate The Best Homemade Kids' Lunches on the Planet: Make Lunches Your Kids Will Love with Over 200 Deliciously Nutritious Lunchbox Ideas - Real Simple, Real Ingredients, Real Quick! What NOT to Write: Real Essays, Real Scores, Real Feedback (California Edition) (LawTutors California Bar Exam Essay Books) Florida Real Estate Law and Practice Explained (All Florida School of Real Estate - Florida Real Estate Mastery) (Volume 1)

Contact Us

DMCA

Privacy

FAQ & Help