McGraw-Hill authors represent the leading experts in their fields and are dedicated to improving the lives, careers, and interests of readers worldwide

I am teaching a Film Appreciation course for non-majors at a University. I was looking for a book that would provide my students with some general information about film technique without overwhelming them with too much information. I love the Bordwell/Thompson Film Art text, but couldn't justify $100 for a book in an elective course. When I picked up the Buckland text, I almost dismissed it because the "Teach Yourself" series looked a little too much like "Film Studies for Idiots." But every time I picked it up, I found myself completing an entire section. (Granted, they are brief.) So for $15 I figured, if I find this book interesting and informative, why not give it a shot for my class? I will have to provide some supplemental articles, and there are some strange inclusions (has anyone ever encountered the term "mise-en-shot"?), but I do think it will meet the needs of my students. They'll learn a bit about narration, mise-en-scene, cinematography, editing, sound, genre, and auteur theory. And if they want to know more, they can check out the "Further Reading" sections at the end of each chapter.

This book really came in handy. I will definitely be using it for a future reference when reviewing a film :) Came in on time

I use this book all the time. My students are always borrowing it. I use it as a reference for my English class when we discuss different mediums for communication.

Book was in great condition
